

All Of Creation

All of Creation is God and from God. Their being no other gods in the sense of the true God not having total control over everything.

God's plan being perfect, how much simpler can understanding be? Who is to question The only one true God and creator of all?

Absolutely nothing then can come from you unless you want to play god as stated in scriptures. You have the "appearance" of being from your own. Able to make all choices in your eternity as a freewill being, but still within the confines what God allows. If that was not in truth, there would be another God.

Your not from your own when you live from your true spiritual self. When the soul figures out that nothing comes from his own, being his own god as scriptures state; living from God's love which is life, you then know your life is not your own but His, which is oneness of all Creation.

Because nothing can be from ones own from the sense of life, not death, (spiritually speaking), the soul will not have understanding on how to live from their perfect created spirit.

When every thing comes from God, there can be no separation unless the flesh-mind thinks and lives from that perspective.

God decides everything because everything is Him. In the sense of salvation, the only thing you can do is make a conscious decision when the decision is to live from love, (which is the only truth), and even then, God can harden hearts and close one's eye for a "time." A time where eternity is always in the present now.
